DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

This application currently names joint inventors. In considering patentability of the claims under 35 U.S.C. 103(a), the examiner presumes that the subject matter of the various claims was commonly owned at the time any inventions covered therein were made absent any evidence to the contrary. Applicant is advised of the obligation under 37 CFR 1.56 to point out the inventor and invention dates of each claim that was not commonly owned at the time a later invention was made in order for the examiner to consider the applicability of 35 U.S.C. 103(c) and potential 35 U.S.C. 102(e), (f) or (g) prior art under 35 U.S.C. 103(a).

Claims 1-27 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Luo in view of Raney et al. Luo teaches the claimed plasma torch including shield cup, electrode swirl ring, nozzle or tip, which all connect together for torch operation. The claims set forth that the components such as cup, electrode and tip are connected to form a one-piece assembly to the torch body. In this respect the patent to Raney et al is applied for teaching that the more parts the operator has to assemble the greater the likelihood of improper assembly, which is a safety hazard. See column 6, lines 45-65. Raney et al teach that some of the parts can form an assembly, which can then be secured to the torch head. Raney et al, in the first paragraph of column 6, mention that the electrode and swirl ring can be press fit together to form an integral part for assembly. Column 7 in Raney et al mentions that the electrode, tip and skirt (cup) can be nested and connected to the torch as an assembly. In view of Raney et al teaching that pre-assembly of torch components such as set forth above, can be beneficial and lead to more torch safety, it would have been an obvious modification to adapt the Luo system with preassembled components, as claimed, so that safer use would occur, with the additional benefit of easier assembly. Use of particular materials for the components is a routine choice in design for the artisan, dependent on the end use of the torch. Use of differing components for the pre-assembled unit, as set forth in the dependent claims, is likewise a matter of choice, since the end use of the device would direct which components are more likely need to be changed more frequently.
